1973

Brothers, Fred and John Rohrbach, graduates of the University of Montana had worked as Smokejumpers with the U.S. Forest Service based out of Missoula, Montana.

In the early 1970s they decided to give up jumping out of airplanes to fight forest fires and start a business exporting ceramic items from Vietnam. They named their business Asia-America Trading Company.

1973

Starting with very little capital, Fred lived in Saigon and did the sourcing and buying while John lived in Seattle handling the marketing and sales.

1975

The brothers decided to import anti reproductions from Taiwan, such as oak tables, press back chairs, cast iron toys and western style brass lamps. When John discovered an oak arrow back chair in an Idaho antique store they had it copied in Taiwan using North American Oak and becoming one of the first companies exporting hardwoods to Taiwan to be made in furniture.

WOOD GUIDE

When you buy furniture from A-America, you are making a responsible decision to maintain a healthier planet. The quality and durability. You can relax knowing that both your new solid wood furniture pieces and the forests which produce them are sustainable.

American Hardwoods such as alder, ash, oak, cherry and hickory reproduce prolifically. Currently nearly twice as much hardwood in U.S. forests has doubled. American foresters follow a simple rule: on-going replenishment equals a sustained yield without a chemically intense man-made process.

Trees use the power of sunlight to separate carbon dioxide into carbon and oxygen atoms. The carbon is used to build wood. A very small amount of energy is needed to turn it into lumber or other wood products.

With growing concern for our environment and the deforestation of the rain forests around the world, it is significant that we source our wood from the Indonesian rain forest. The farmers carefully grow the trees in distinctive patterns, each field displaying trees in a grid for reforestation. The government controls and regulates all wood cuttings. Our Asian hardwood, mahogany and Neolignum are all FSC Lacey Act standards.

Acacia wood is one of the best quality woods for furniture making. Renowned for having a diverse population, is found on almost all continents. We source this wood from plantations in Vietnam, which makes it an environmentally sound and sustainable choice. The look of this wood is incredibly versatile, ranging from yellow to weathered gray and even a darker cherry when cut closer to the heartwood, or center of the wood. Not only does it have beautiful coloration (which when finished can go from light to dark) but it's also extra durable. This durability and strength properties are bolstered by it's fine grain, rot and scratch resistance.

ACACIA

Birch is a hardwood that is extremely strong and durable, making it a great choice for solid hardwood furniture. Birch wood has a beautiful appearance, with a fine grain and pale coloring which gives it an elegant look for clean line furniture designs. In recent years, solid birch has been finished in dark espresso color because the heavy density of the lumber makes it harder to dent and scratch, therefore keeping it looking new for an extended period of time. Birch trees used for furniture are traditionally harvested from the colder climates found in Northern Europe and Russia.

BIRCH

A-America is proud to claim to be the only manufacturer who has successfully produced and imported solid hickory furniture. Hickory is part of the pecan and walnut family and is usually from the Pennsylvania region. Hickory wood is very hard, stiff, dense and shock resistant and an extremely difficult material to use in building furniture. There are woods that are stronger than hickory and woods that are harder, but the combination of strength, toughness, hardness, and stiffness found in hickory wood is not found in any other commercial wood. Only the most experienced craftsman can produce beautiful, stylish hickory furniture. Amish style furniture is typically made from hickory.

HICKORY

The solid hardwoods and time-tested craftsmanship used to build your furniture ensure premium quality, luxury. The wood will be around to enjoy for generations.

As much hardwood grows each year than is harvested, which is why in the last 50 years the volume of hardwood supply. Hardwood trees are grown through a process patented by nature. They're not mined or created through

It is important to inform our customers that none of the wood used in the crafting of our furniture stems from the various stages of growth. Once the mature trees are harvested, the fields are re-seeded to maintain a healthy forest. New Zealand pine are plantation grown and are also legally harvested and certified and controlled under the Alder has been used in many ways throughout history. Common alder is a member of the birch family, yet the fine, even texture of alder wood makes it similar to cherry. We often refer alder as the "poor man's cherry" because of its beauty and affordability. Its appearance and high quality make it a popular choice for furniture and cabinets. Red alder grown in the Pacific Northwest is medium in density and is the preferred species used to build furniture. Alder trees are a gift from Mother Nature since they replant themselves in the forest by dropping its cones.

ALDER

Mahogany is a medium density wood that has color variances combining white, pink, peach, gray and brown wood tones to create a more exotic look with stunning with unique patterns that adds character to your home. Compared to oak and maple, mahogany is relatively light weight and is easier to mill and cut than most other hardwoods. Mahogany is a popular choice for both indoor and outdoor uses because it is dimensionally stable, resistant to rot, humidity and insects. Because mahogany can grow to immense sizes, this wood produces thick, wide and long wood that is perfect for making larger pieces of furniture.

MAHAGONY

Red Maple, which is also called Soft Maple, is a medium-high density wood, from deciduous trees in eastern North America. Soft maple takes any finish colors well, though like all maple, its grain and color varies from white to gray tones with mineral deposits. These natural wood characteristics are becoming more and more sought after because it adds an "organic" feel to furniture. Soft maple can be mixed in production of furniture with birch wood to create a better value.

MAPLE

Pine is a light weight, straight grained soft wood usually white or pale yellow in color. Because pine is an evergreen, it is technically considered a softwood but in fact is a very stiff. It's durability and strength makes it an excellent option for building furniture and naturally resists shrinking and swelling. Pine is also one of the few softwoods that is produced like a hardwood and is a popular choice for furniture makers because it's so easy to work with, versatile, and takes stains and finishes very easily.

PINE

Solid Asian Hardwoods are primary milled from rubberwood trees which are plantation grown and responsibly harvested in Southeast Asia. Trees are cut down once they have aged and have completed their latex sap production cycle. Amazingly, the rubber wood tree species is fast-growing yet also very high in density and provides a hard wood material which is excellent for furniture production. Today, the most well-known American furniture brands use solid Asian hardwoods because of its durability and can be finished into beautiful high-end looks.

ASIAN HARDWOOD

Derived from the Latin "Populus" because the trees were routinely planted in public spaces or near people, or the "populus." It provides an excellent surface for painting and a variety of finishes. A-America uses poplar to add structural integrity to our furniture. It is found throughout the Northern Hemisphere and is commonly referred to in North America as the beautiful Tulip Tree. The genus also includes aspen and cottonwood. Poplar grows best around bodies of water and can be easily farmed, making it another environmentally positive choice.

POPLAR

Yes, the very same trees that produce delicious mango fruits also produce beautiful wood after the fruit has been harvested! Often referred to as the "affordable" teak alternative, mango trees are fast growing from Southeast Asia and the ideal substitution for endangered species like teak. Mango wood has unique "tigard" stripes and multitudes of grain and color variations while also naturally repelling water. It is a hard wood which will provide durability even with everyday usage and does not require extensive processing, seasoning nor drying which is better for the environment. Mango lumber is best used in a rustic finish and craftsman designs. It is easy to love this beautiful, exotic wood that is also an affordable value.

MANGO

Beautiful solid oak wood adapts well in a wide range of light to dark finishes to create modern or traditional designs. Oak is durable and long lasting because oak trees take their time to grow slowly to produce high density material. It is no wonder that some of the most treasured American antiques are made of oak. In fact with proper care, you can continue using this oak furniture for even a century so what you buy today will be your children and even grandchildren's heirlooms. Oak is known to be scratch, stain and dust resistance making it easier to maintain and clean when compared to other woods.

Walnut is prized by woodworkers for its strength, tight grain, and beautiful colors ranging from a creamy white in the sapwood to a dark chocolate in the heartwood. Over the years, natural walnut wood develops a lustrous patina and polishes to a very smooth finish. Walnut trees are monoecious, meaning a single tree contains both male (catkin) and female (pistillate) flowers, allowing the trees to self pollinate.

WALNUT

WOOD HARDNESS

Hardness of wood is measured using the Janka Scale, developed by Austrian born American researcher Gabriel Janka and standardized by the American Society for Testing and Materials (ASTM) in 1927. The scale ranges from 0 to 4000. The higher the rating on the scale, the more durable and wear resistant the wood is. The lower the number on the scale, the more susceptible the wood is to dents and scratches.

The Janka test measures the force required to embed a 7/16 inch (11.29mm) steel ball halfway into the wood sample. The Janka test always uses wood samples taken from the trunk (heartwood) of the tree with a 12% moisture content and free from knots.

Softer woods such as balsa have a rating of 70, where some of the hardest woods like Australian Buloke have a Janka rating near 4000. A species of wood that measures 1000 on the Janka scale requires 1000 pounds of force to embed the steel ball halfway into the wood. The number is a statistical average for that species of wood.

The hardness of wood is not indicative of its strength. The hardness serves only as an indicator of how well the wood will withstand day to day wear and tear, not how strong the wood is.

The chart lists the Janka ratings for A-America's woods used in our products.

SOLID WOOD

Organic solid wood products will consistently balance themselves with their local environmental conditions. To avoid excessive warping or cracking issues, maintain an environment at or around 70° Fahrenheit with relative humidity between 40% to 50%. Proper ventilation and air current is recommended for all solid wood products. Any adjustment to room temperature should be made gradually. Drastic changes to environmental conditions are extremely stressing to wood in general. Excess heat and dryness can cause potential cracking and/or splitting. Using a humidifier is a great tool to protect your solid wood investment. Product should be kept away from direct heat sources such a fireplace, in floor heating, etc.

Solid wood will expand and contract with temperature and humidity changes. This movement is normal and appears as "checking" (small surface cracks) and does not affect the structural integrity of this piece. Wood and lacquers will naturally darken (or amber) over time. To help minimize this effect, furniture should not be exposed to direct sunlight for prolonged periods of time. If direct sunlight cannot be avoided, it is recommended to rotate the piece(s) periodically to even exposure.

MISSION HILL

MINDI › HARVEST FINISH Oil Rubbed Bronze Hardware

The simple, sturdy vertical lines of our Mission Hill bedroom speak to the motifs of the Arts & Crafts design movement, ornamented mainly by the grain of the wood, the joinery, and the hardware. Although the mortise and tenon joinery and closely spaced long wooden slats are reminiscent of the related mission furniture style and offer a classically traditional aesthetic, the simple silhouette caters to a living style and philosophy that can make any home more satisfying, comfortable, and beautiful. Features classic craftsman hardware that emulates a hand forged hammer tone texture in an oil rubbed bronze finish.

STORMY RIDGE

SOLID HARDWOOD › CHICORY & SLATE FINISH

Chicory Finished Hardware

Stormy Ridge invites warm hospitality to the dining room with its practical farmhouse style. Design details such as the hourglass-inspired trestle on both the table and bench are reproduced in the x-shapes gracing the sideboard doors. Pronounced distressing in the chicory finish mimics the look of time-worn wood that is contrasted by the soft slate black paint reminiscent of vintage chalkboards. All tables feature equalizing cable glides for easily converting the table tops, with both rectangular tables having self storing butterfly leaves. The stylish sideboard has the x-shape carried over to the doors, with plenty of storage options including three large felt lined drawers, adjustable and removable shelving in each cabinet, and two removable wine racks.
